

Charles McCombe

Call: 2017

2021.

After returning from the Supreme Court, Charles hopes to develop a practice across Chambers' main areas of work, with a particular focus on crime, public law, extradition and related areas of international law.

Crime

Charles appears in the Magistrates' and Crown Courts for both the prosecution and the defence. He also acts for the National Probation Service in breach proceedings. In addition to general criminal matters, Charles has a growing interest in financial crime and the proceeds of crime.

Public Law

Charles accepts instructions across the main areas of Chambers' public law work. He has a particular interest in judicial review proceedings which concern criminal justice and national security matters.

Extradition and Mutual Legal Assistance

Charles appears on behalf of requested persons in extradition cases.

Other Information

Throughout his legal studies, Charles has been involved in a number of pro bono projects in different areas including prison law, criminal appeals, social security and education law. He intends to maintain his involvement in pro bono and other access-to-justice-related work whilst in practice.

Charles has developed a significant academic interest in criminal justice and public law. At Cambridge, Charles's MPhil dissertation considered the relationship between harm, dangerousness, sentencing and probation. At Penn, his studies spanned constitutional law, criminal law, international human rights law and the ever-growing field of U.S. law referred to as "cimmigration", which seeks to understand the relationship between immigration law and criminal justice.

Outside of law, Charles has worked in politics in his native Northern Ireland, on a voluntary basis, with a particular interest in human rights, cross-community and constitutional issues.
